3RD ANNUAL ENVIRONMENTAL LAW SYMPOSIUM

WHO SHOULD ATTEND

- Attorneys representing, or desiring to represent, clients with environmental justice concerns
- Public interest attorneys, community and environmental organizations, and anyone seeking to learn more about the state of environmental justice law
- Planners, policymakers, and elected officials contemplating new proposals for addressing environmental justice in Washington and beyond
- Persons seeking to learn more about the latest national and regional research findings across a range of disciplines at the UW

ABOUT THE PROGRAM

Join us for the 3rd Annual University of Washington Environmental Law Symposium. This year's symposium focuses on the latest research and most promising avenues for advancing environmental justice through law in our region and beyond. The event is cosponsored by the UW Department of Environmental & Occupational Health Sciences, the UW Superfund Research Program, the UW Center for Exposures, Diseases, Genomics and Environment (EDGE), and the Washington Journal of Environmental Law & Policy. Our one-day gathering will feature discussion of: research on disparate environmental impacts, the many visions for environmental justice, the current state of federal and state environmental justice law, potential new legal avenues for equitable environmental protection, and practices of fair and equal engagement among different communities of experience and expertise.
